About Wings of Russia Award

Wings of Russia is the national airline award established and organized by Air Transport Observer magazine, the Russian Air Transport Operators Association. Launched in 1997, the Wings of Russia Award is now accepted as Russia's only program recognizing excellence in commercial air transport. Over 50 Russian carriers compete annually in 10 categories including domestic and international passenger transport, air cargo, business aviation and carriers serving industries of the Russian economy. This year some important innovations have taken place - the Public Council can now bring forward airline companies in different nominations whereas in previous years this was the privilege of airlines alone. Companies are invited to draw up their own entries explaining the merits of their achievements and then to submit them to an independent Public Council. The Wings of Russia Public Council numbers over 126 industry experts, representatives of governmental agencies, related business and financial circles, mass media. The intense competition results in a great nationwide prestige for the winners. The program ensures that the winners secure recognition of their achievements.
